

All Volunteer Seattle Subway Foundation Board of Directors

Drew Johnson, Capitol Hill

President and Volunteer Coordinator. He started volunteering with us in 2014, became a board member and Volunteer Coordinator in June of 2016, and was elected President in December of 2016. Born and raised in south Alabama, he now lives with his wife in Capitol Hill. He believes that access to a diverse and highly functional public transit network is a social justice issue. He received his Bachelors in Economics and Finance from The University of South Alabama, and is currently employed with the State of Washington Department of Social and Health Services.

Ben Broesamle, Magnolia

Treasurer and Operations Director. Born in Santa Monica, CA, he received his Bachelor of Arts in Geography-Urban and Regional Development Studies from UCLA and moved to Seattle to join his immediate family in 2010. His transit interest began after travelling to Europe and seeing just how much better life could be with better travel options than the typical Los Angeles-area gridlocked traffic. He received his master's degree from the College of Built Environments at the University of Washington in 2016 where he studied real estate and transportation.

Charles Cooper, Shoreline

Board Secretary. Born in Hawaii and grew up as a military brat in California and Washington State. Graduating from Western Washington University with a degree in Business Administration, Charles has had a long career in the Software Industry and IT Management including co-launching a software startup, large scale systems deployments in Legal and financial verticals and IT operations management. Charles's interest in urban transit was tweaked by his experience with the CTA while living in Chicago for a number of years including 2 years living car free. On returning to Seattle, he got involved with the Seattle Subway Foundation as a volunteer and then later as a board member to help foster the vision for a robust transit system and an urban environment that fosters walkability and neighborhood amenities.

Matthew Johnson, Columbia City

Board Member and Communications Director. Matthew Johnson has lived on and off in the Seattle area since 2007, finally settling down in the Columbia City neighborhood of Seattle in 2012. Along with his Seattle Subway work he has written for the Seattle Transit Blog since 2013 and was an editor from 2014-2015. Originally from South Alabama, he was a soldier from 2006 to 2012, serving in the Infantry and Psychological Operations. He now works in the communications field.

Seattle Subway Foundation, previously Seattle Subway Organization, is a Washington State nonprofit corporation, a Washington State charitable organization, and a 501(c)(3) public charity. Donations to Seattle Subway Foundation are tax deductible to the extent allowed by law (EIN 45-4745609).

Adam Dodge, Columbia City

Board member. Adam grew up all over the US and accepted that having to drive everywhere was just a fact of life. Following college he moved to Japan and there realized the opportunity and mobility a robust transit system provides. After further traveling throughout Asia and Europe he returned to the US, settling in Seattle. Once accustomed to best-in-the-world transit systems, he found it impossible to accept the transit status quo in Seattle. Adam joined the Seattle Subway Foundation to help change that status quo by working to bring a high-quality transit system to Seattle. He works in IT and loves his cats.

Steven Neuman, Ballard

Board Member. Steven is a product designer focused on user experience at Amazon Web Services' Internet of Things division. He loves nerding-out about development, urban design and understanding the 'how' and 'why' of things. As a former journalist he is a passionate defender of the Oxford comma, an avid cook and fan of all types of outdoorsy things like camping, hiking, and gardening. He lives with his wife and two small children in Ballard. A Seattleite since 2009, he looks forward to many more decades making this city his home.
